

No agricultural product can tell a story quite like wine. It's a relatively simple concept: take some grapes, throw them into a barrel or tank or garbage can or kiddie pool, wait for the magic of fermentation and VOILA!

Somehow this seemingly simple tippie has the ability to transport the drinker to another place and time. It's hard to imagine that anything could be more intertwined with civilization than wine. Indeed, wine stands uniquely at the crossroads of culture and geology, of history and meteorology, of politics and religion and of literature and celebration. Entire cuisines are so influenced by the wine cultures around which they were developed that it is impossible to separate the two. Oh yeah, and it happens to taste really good, too!

As long as wine has existed, so too has storytelling surrounding the beverage been present. Even the origin mythology of the Greek god of grape-harvest and winemaking, Dionysus, is a chronicle of wine's journey from the Caucasus Mountains to the Mediterranean. The current generation of storytellers such as Eric Asimov, Hugh Johnson and Jane Anson among many others, are telling the relevant wine stories of today, but their 19th and 20th century equivalents told stories that were just as relevant in their time and remain surprisingly topical today.

We are about to embark on a wine journey together in the style of so many wine travel writers before us. In the pages that follow, we will encounter all manner of people and regions. Some you may like, others you may not, but all will hopefully prove to be interesting. Aristocratic families and magnificent chateaus are here. Plucky upstarts and humble farmers are in these pages, too. Forgotten and familiar grapes are speckled throughout the list, and a multitude of vintages speak to the growing conditions the vines endured in a particular year prior to ending up in your glass. We hope you enjoy the stories that follow and encourage you to try something new, pop a few corks and enjoy!

United Kingdom

We start our sparkling wine journey in southern England, of all places. "English Fizz" has become the hot new thing in sparkling wine, no pun intended, as rising temperatures have made the island an exciting place for bubbly.

Champagne

After indulging the island upstarts, it's time to hop on the ferry at Dover and make the quick trip across the English Channel to Calais and then down the A26 to Reims, the capital of the Champagne region, mimicking Charles Walter Berry's route in "In Search of Wine". We are now in the spiritual home of sparkling wines and the inspiration for thousands of misattributed quotes from figures ranging from Napoleon to Marilyn Monroe. Our official position is that Champagne is the single greatest thing on Earth (we're leaving the door open to the tiny possibility that something better is out there somewhere in the universe), and that it's an essential part of a balanced and nutritious diet. Please plan accordingly.

Germany

There's no better place to start our white wine journey than the valley of the Rhine River, the birthplace of the noble grape, Riesling. Mouthwateringly dry to lusciously sweet and everything in between, German Riesling can be infuriatingly complicated and mind bendingly enjoyable at once. We love Riesling and we are desperate for you to love it, too. Don't stress about the wine names being too long to fit in a tweet, that's just Germans being German. Simply ask us for some advice and we'll help you pick the perfect bottle that will put you down the Riesling fiend path like the rest of us.

Mosel

As we head south from Cologne down the Rhine Valley, the first two wine growing regions are the tributary valleys of the Mosel and Nahe Rivers. These cool and steep valleys are responsible for producing wines that are so good they might just change your life, but if not, they'll definitely make your day!

Selbach-Oster

Johannes Selbach and his family grow Riesling grapes in some of the most dramatic vineyards in the world. The crazy steep vineyards along the banks of the Mosel River produce our favorite Rieslings and no one can match the wines of Selbach-Oster. Johannes crafts classic wines of balance and complexity that range from light bodied and elegant to rich and powerful. The family has been in the wine business since 1600, so they've had plenty of practice, and it shows in the quality of each bottle. Treat yourself to a wonderful wine made by wonderful people.

Man cannot live on Riesling alone, so we must continue our voyage down the Rhine (or the Bg if you'd prefer to drive) with the ultimate goal of the French border. Not too keen to be left out, a few of Germany's other regions beckon for a little of our affection. The Rheingau, Rheinhessen, Pfalz and Baden regions produce much more than just Riesling, although the Rieslings are impressive, full bodied examples. Some of the most exciting up and coming producers in Germany are located in these areas.

Alsace

Crossing the border from Germany into France represents so much more than a change in jurisdiction or a more sophisticated wine marketing strategy. France is the center of the wine universe and has been since the fall of the Roman Empire. When it comes to wine, France is the Monolith and the rest of us are just primates taking our cues according. The French produce a dizzying array of wine styles from noble and neglected grapes alike. Whether you are looking for a crisp and zippy thirst quencher, a richly textured and unctuous sipper or a sophisticated bottle to pair with a cheese plate, France has been perfecting your order for 1,000 years.

At Strasbourg we hop over to the western side of the Rhine Valley and find ourselves in the long and skinny region of Alsace at the base of the Vosges Mountains. What is Alsace? German? French? German? French? Neither? Alsatian? The answer is yes to all. This region has been passed back and forth between the two countries so many times that the Alsatians have created their own unique culture and wine styles. Alsace is the Spinal Tap of French whites: full throttled, spicy wines that routinely go up to 11.

Loire Valley

After sampling the hedonistic pleasures of Alsace's whites, it's time to head west in search of the perfect oyster wine. We'll start our exploration of the Loire Valley in Nantes, where the Loire River empties into the Atlantic. The Loire Valley is positively massive and before heads rolled during the French Revolution it served as a country getaway for the rich and famous. Everyone had a chateau in the Loire, literally everyone. Kings, queens, dukes, bishops, and even royal mistresses (once they had, uh, "retired") had their own chateau on France's longest river.

MUSCADET

Wine styles and grape varieties change as we move inland in the Loire Valley. Beginning around the city of Nantes, the Muscadet region produces light and citrusy wines with a distinctive salty aftertaste. Perfect for oysters or patios. In Houston, we think almost every day is a Musca-day!

ANJOU/SAUMUR/TOURAIN

Moving east and further inland we are now entering the Chenin Blanc territory of Anjou/Saumur/Touraine. The Chenin grape originates in this part of France and nowhere else on earth can create a better example than right here in central France. Like Chardonnay, but thinking about being a little adventurous? Order one of these Chenin beauties and see what you are missing.

UPPER LOIRE

Continuing upstream, we take a sharp turn towards the south and plunge into the center of France. The limestone and flint soils surrounding the towns of Pouilly-sur-Loire and Sancerre signal that we have entered the land of Sauvignon Blanc. Citrusy and grassy with more than a hint of tropical fruit, drinking a cool Sancerre is like lounging in the sun on a freshly cut lawn while drinking a mimosa.

Chablis

*Ok, we've waited long enough.
We've crisscrossed the continent in search of great white wines and you have been extremely patient, but now it's time for some killer Chardonnays! From Sancerre we'll take a short jaunt east in search of the world's most popular white grape. We have found ourselves in Chablis, the northernmost outpost of the Burgundy region. Burgundy is the birthplace of Chardonnay and the model for producers of Chardonnay all over the world.
Chablis is a special little island of vines that is capable of two enviable feats: (a) putting the taste of crushed seashells in liquid form and (b) making such a thing taste incredible.*

Burgundy

Pardon us for dragging you away from Chablis, but we've only just scraped the tip of the Burgundy iceberg and we have more work to do. Let's head southeast and make a stop in Dijon for a bit of the mustard that carries the city's name and was originally made from the juice of unripe Chardonnay berries from the surrounding vineyards. Today, Dijon mustard is not even produced in Dijon, but we can probably find some Grey Poupon in a corner store.

Motoring south out of Dijon on the RN74 (D974 to those of you lacking sentimentality) we are now in the heart of Burgundy, known as the Côte d'Or. This narrow ridge of limestone runs alongside RN74 and is the site of some of the world's most coveted dirt for Chardonnay and Pinot Noir. White Burgundy is in a category all to itself and one of contradictions, at that. Powerful but understated, rich but delicate, seductive but sophisticated are a few that come to mind, but more importantly it seems like a bottle of White Burgundy is empty almost as soon as the cork is pulled, and there's no mystery in that.

If You Know, You Know (Aligoté Version)

How do you do, fellow kids? We see you drinking Aligoté and hoping no one else catches on. This grape has come out of the shadows and is now being highlighted by some of the top producers of the Côte d'Or. It's still under the radar for now, but there's an Aligoté rap out there, so maybe not for long. Enjoy it while you can!

Maison Harbour

Nicholas and Colleen Harbour moved to the village of Savigny-les-Beaune in 2012 to escape the world of finance and make wines from the revered clay and limestone soils of Burgundy. This was an ambitious endeavour that few would dare to try, but through a combination of persistence and relationships with classmates from winemaking school, the Harbours were able to secure grapes from some of Burgundy's most coveted vineyards. Maison Harbour's wines are characterized by their elegance and beautiful expression of the uniquely different sites in which the grapes are grown. The whites are showstoppers, but the reds are just as good, so check them out, too! Maybe a bottle of each from Maison Harbour is the way to go!

As we begrudgingly continue south out of the Côte d'Or, the limestone ridge gives way to rolling hills punctuated by dramatic limestone outcrops. Known as the Côte Chalonnaise and Mâconnais, these final regions of Burgundy offer the kind of rich, ripe and utterly drinkable wines that might cause a Cali Chardonnay drinker to move over to the dark side. Relative to their Côte d'Or cousins, these wines are bargains, too!

Jura

We continue the journey west across the broad plain of the Saône River towards the inevitability of the Alps. Everyone is likely suffering from a mild case of gout from our tour through Burgundy, but we should take the opportunity, as we pass through the Bresse region, to sample one of their world famous roasted chickens. Now, on to the Jura! The Jura region lies in the foothills of the Alps and is almost a mirror image of Burgundy. The limestone formation having been pulled apart by the forces that created the Saône River valley. At The Library, we have a real affection for the idiosyncratic wines of the Jura. We won't even mind if you call them weird.

VIN JAUNE

Vin Jaune is one of the wildest and most unique wine styles on the planet and is only made in the Jura. Vin Jaune literally means "yellow wine" and is named for the color of the wine after it has aged for 6+ years in partially filled barrels that encourage oxidation. And if that's not weird enough, a thin layer of yeast, called a "veil", is allowed to grow on top of the wine and eat certain nutrients from the wine during the aging process. Vin Jaune is most similar to Sherry, but without the extra alcohol from fortification. The resulting wine smells like a chemistry lab (in a good way, if that's possible), but is so complex and so weird that it is truly one of the world's great wines and intended for contemplation.

Savoie

Farther south and deeper into the Alps we find ourselves in the middle of the resort towns of the Savoie. These are high altitude, cool climate wines that are just as refreshing on a Houston patio after a long day in a soulless office as they are in the chalet after a less depressing day on the slopes. The wine equivalent of alpine spring water.

Rhone Valley

The last stop before we spill out into the Mediterranean is the Rhone Valley. We'll set sail on the Rhone itself as it flows out of Lake Geneva. Rhone whites are mostly blends: Roussanne/Marsanne in the north and Grenache Blanc/Clairette and friends in the south. The exception being the pure Viogniers of Condrieu. Expect full bodied and textural wines full of herbs, citrus fruits and nuts.

From the mouth of the Rhone, we can cruise east right through Marseille and the surrounding area of Provence towards the intimidating mass of the western Alps that separates France from the vast winelands of Italy. You can take your pick of which tunnel you prefer, but all lead to the northern Italian regions where most of the country's high quality whites are made.

Austria

After a brief tour through the cuff of Italy's boot that has landed us in Friuli, it's time for us to cross back over the Alps and see what Austria has to offer. Hopefully you packed plenty of Prosciutto di San Daniele and Montasio cheese, because it is a long and twisty drive through the Alps and all the way to the Danube River north of Vienna. This area is the Niederösterreich and is known for the uniquely Austrian grape, Grüner Veltliner, and truly delicious Rieslings.

Burgenland

Let's pull ourselves away from the Niederösterreich and hop on down to Vienna for a healthy serving of boiled beef, Tafelspitz, and maybe even an Apfelstrudel to hold us over until we reach the area of Burgenland. The Burgenland surrounds the 122 square mile Lake Neusiedl and the wines reflect the influence of such a large body of water. If you are tall, you can even walk from one end of the lake to the other since it is less than 6' at its deepest point!

Like modern-day Pilgrims, we have landed in the New World in search of freedom from the wine rules of the Continent. Freedom from the stuffy bureaucracy! Freedom from long, unpronounceable names! Varietally labeled liberty! Unlike the Pilgrims, though, we'd prefer our freedom with a bit of alcohol. In the New World, everything goes. Top winemakers are making classic wines in the regions that everyone knows, but others are pushing all the boundaries and making fun and delicious wines from unpopular grapes in unheard of areas.

This is the part of the wine list where you would expect to see a rosé pun or a witty rhyme. We're sorry, but you are not going to get it this time (oh, damn it!). Seriously, though, rosé is real wine, no different from reds or whites. Some are best enjoyed cold and young without much thought and some are made to showcase the character and complexity of the grapes that go into the bottle. No matter the style, we've got you covered, kind of like a rosé buffet!

Loire Valley

We begin our journey through the world's red wines on the Atlantic coast of France, in rainy Nantes, where the Loire River meets the ocean. There is a bit of Pinot Noir grown in the Muscadet area, but as we follow the river inland we find ourselves in the center of the Cabernet Franc universe. Loire Valley Cabernet Franc and its blend of red fruit and tobacco is as close to Bordeaux on a budget as it gets.

Bordeaux

As fun as the Loire Valley can be, it's time to swap our work boots and floppy hats for more sophisticated attire as we head south towards the famous port city on the Atlantic, Bordeaux. There isn't a place more synonymous with wine than Bordeaux. Wines from Bordeaux chateaus have been referenced by name since the 17th century and the amount of ink spilled over the wines ever since could fill an ocean. So, is Bordeaux stuffy, old-fashioned and pretentious? Well, it can be, but it doesn't have to be. The truth is that Bordeaux is really fing good and its ability to transform with age is magical. Cabernet Sauvignon, Cabernet Franc and Merlot work together in this wet and muddy environment to create something truly special.

Left Bank

Bordeaux is divided into two parts by the Garonne estuary, which opens to the Atlantic. The left, or west, bank is known as the Médoc and is the place where Cabernet Sauvignon was made famous and dominates the blend. The wines are famed for their aging ability and unique gravelly character.

Château Montrose, Saint-Estephe

Château Montrose was built in 1815 on a mound of deep gravel near the Gironde estuary on the left bank of Bordeaux that is known as the Médoc. Montrose was so named due to the flowers that grew on the "mountain" prior to the planting of vines. Leave it to the French sense of poetic license to refer to a hill that is 60 feet high as a "Mont". Dominated by Cabernet Sauvignon, the chateau's wines are big and structured and benefit from a little, or a lot of aging, courtesy of The Library. Perfectly aged Montrose is a revelation and one of our favorite wine experiences.

Bordeaux

Some people are down on Bordeaux. They don't think it's cool enough or affordable enough or accessible enough for today's wine drinker. We disagree. We think you should drink it because it tastes good and just like Nike Dunks and baggy jeans, we think it's time for Bordeaux to make a comeback.

Right Bank

The right bank of Bordeaux is the fun friend of the Bordeaux bank duo. These wines are predominantly made from Merlot and have a more luxurious profile as a result. Think robe and comfy slippers in front of the fireplace luxurious. Bordeaux-curious? Try a wine from the right bank and thank us later.

Burgundy

Heading east out of Bordeaux, the spire of the Saint Emilion Church still visible in the rearview mirror, you may start to feel your heart flutter in anticipation as we approach our next destination.

Burgundy has a tendency to do that. In our last visit to the Cote d'Or, we learned that this is the birthplace of the Chardonnay grape. In a true embarrassment of riches, this is also the birthplace of Pinot Noir, an ancient variety that happens to be a parent of Chardonnay.

Pinot Noir grown in these limestone soils is unlike anything grown in the rest of the world. Compared to the dark, full bodied wines of Bordeaux, red Burgundy is something altogether different. Burgundy is the Bach to Bordeaux's Beethoven, the Cat Stevens to Bordeaux's Mick Jagger, or maybe the Steph Curry to Bordeaux's Lebron. You surely get the point.

Burgundy has hundreds, if not thousands, of individual vineyards that were originally set out by the Benedictine and Cistercian monks in the middle ages. These guys were the most educated agricultural-ists of the era and the must have had plenty of time on their hands because they outlined a collection of vineyards that continues to captive wine lovers today.

The slightly different soils and exposures of each Burgundian village infuse the wines with their own unique character. Full bodied and powerful Gevrey-Chambertin, spicy and sophisticated Vosne-Romanee, delicate and lacy Chambolle-Musigny and the elegant and floral Volnay are just a few examples of Burgundy's remarkable ability to translate a place into your glass.

We are devout worshippers of the Cult of Burgundy here at The Library. There is a red Burgundy for every taste and every season. You'll find wines from most of the villages of the Cote d'Or listed from north to south on the following pages. So go nuts and explore the variety the region can offer. Feel free to grab a book on Burgundy from the shelves and look at a map of the specific vineyard in your glass or read a profile of the producer who made the wine.

If you enjoy California Pinot Noir, you should try a Burgundy. If you drink Bordeaux, you should try a Burgundy. If you like vodka, you should try a Burgundy. If you think you don't like wine, you should try a Burgundy. If you have something to celebrate, you should try a Burgundy. If you're feeling blue, you should try a Burgundy. If that doesn't help, then you should talk to professional, but we'd also recommend trying another Burgundy, just for good measure.

Domaine Michel Lafarge

The late Michel Lafarge was a legend among both wine lovers and his fellow winemakers in Burgundy. During his lifetime, he experienced over 70 vintages in his home village of Volnay and made soulful wines full of character in the great vintages as well as the challenging ones. Michel's quiet confidence and humble attitude meant that the wines were sometimes overlooked in the past, despite the high quality. All that has changed today and Domaine Lafarge is now one of the most sought after producers in Burgundy. Michel's son, Frédéric, and his granddaughter, Clothilde, are now faithfully continuing his legacy and show no signs of slowing down.

Jura

Parting with Burgundy is indeed sweet sorrow, but we have places to go and vineyards to discover. There are more wines in heaven and earth, Horatio, than just those in Burgundy, wonderful though they may be. Before going south to Lyon and the wines of Beaujolais, we're going to travel east across the Saône River for a quick visit to the intensely rural wine region of the Jura. Jura reds are made from Pinot Noir, Poulsard and Trousseau and are unique wines: crunchy red fruit, earthy and even a bit funky sometimes.

Beaujolais

Now we are free to continue our journey south along the Saône toward Beaujolais. Around the city of Mâcon, the soil abruptly changes from limestone, clay and sand to granite and granitic sands. Granite soils are to the Gamay grape what Abbey Road was to the Beatles. The grape can make okay wines in many places, but the granite of Beaujolais can propel Gamay to Revolver or Sgt. Pepper levels.

If your perception of Beaujolais is based on that industrial monstrosity known as Beaujolais Nouveau, then these bottles are going blow your mind. Real Beaujolais is nothing like the bubblegum and banana flavored alcohol water that the worst examples of Nouveau have become. True Beaujolais shows similarities to Burgundy and when produced in one of the ten Cru villages, the wines are worthy rivals of some of the best of the Cote d'Or.

Beaujolais

Winemakers in Beaujolais are well known for their love of a good party. Friends, family and visitors are often treated to hospitality that lasts well into the wee hours and is fueled by large quantities of Beaujolais wine. It's in that spirit that we've put together a collection of magnums for you to enjoy with your friends and families and maybe even a stranger or two.

Rhône Valley

Beaujolais, gone but not forgotten as we head south to the gluttony capital of France, Lyon, and meet up with the Rhone River. After leaving lake Geneva, the Rhône heads west to Lyon before turning abruptly south towards the Mediterranean. The Rhône Valley wine region is massive and is divided into the steep hillside vineyards of the north and the flat alluvial plain of the south.

Northern Rhône

The Northern Rhône Valley is tiny in comparison to the southern valley and the vineyards are predominately on steep granite cliffs that are often terraced. Syrah is the only red grape allowed in Northern Rhone wines which tells you how well suited the grape is to these meager soils.

The hill of Hermitage is one of the most iconic landforms of the wine world. This imposing chunk of granite juts out into the Rhone River and changes its course in a not so subtle show of geological force. Hermitage produces the most well known and arguably the best Syrah wines in existence. Popular legend says that the name "Hermitage" comes from a refuge that was built on top of the hill in the 13th century by Gaspard de Sterimberg, a knight wounded in the Crusades, as a place to recover. Apparently ole Gaspy decided never to leave the hillside retreat and became a hermit, hence the name.

Southern Rhône

At Montélimar, the narrow granite valleys give way to a broad plain that has seen the Rhone meander across its surface for thousands of years, leaving deposits of sand, clay, and pebbles. Glacial formation and retreat during the last ice age has left much larger rounded stones known as galets. Syrah also gives way to Grenache, which is blended with Syrah, Mourvedre, Cinsault or Carignan for most of the area's red wines.

Chateauneuf-du-Pape, "The New House of the Pope", is home to more than the summer residence of a few antipopes. Dante put Clement V in his eighth circle for moving the papacy to Avignon, but we're a bit more lenient. After all, their presence was likely the genesis of the luscious Grenache based wines made in Chateauneuf today, which, in our opinion, deserves much better treatment than an eternity in a Hieronymus Bosch scene.

We've now reached the mouth of the Rhone and the vastness that is southern France. Grenache and friends dominate the red wines of the various regions, but there are many unique varieties and vineyards that make the area between Italy and the Pyrenees Mountains akin to the wild west when it comes to wine.

Piemonte

We say au revoir to France and head over the Alps into Northern Italy and prepare ourselves for a marathon of some of the world's greatest, and most distinctive, red wines. Some areas in Italy have been making high quality red wines for a century or more, but it wasn't until the '60s and '70s that most wine producing regions began to focus on high quality wines. This revolution was led by personalities such as Luigi Veronelli, who stressed to producers that great wine starts with the vineyard and respecting the grapes and soil is the key to quality. Now Italy's red wines take a back seat to no one, but don't take our word for it. Pull a cork and find out for yourself!

First stop on our Italian adventure is Piemonte, because we are too impulsive to save the best for last. The Nebbiolo grape, when planted in the rolling hills of limestone and clay that define Piemonte's most famous villages, Barolo and Barbaresco, is capable of producing spectacular wines that make us wonder why we would ever drink anything else. Piemonte and its capital, Turin, have been closely associated with France throughout history, even being ruled by Napoleon for a spell in the 19th century after the battle of Marengo (which spawned a famous chicken recipe). This close association is responsible for the Piemontese adopting French winemaking techniques much sooner and is also partly responsible for the trend of bottling single vineyards in Barolo and Barbaresco.

Piemonte

The other red grapes of Piemonte were historically the peasant wines of the region, with Nebbiolo being reserved for the nobility and merchant class. Things have changed dramatically since then for these once ignored grapes. Dolcetto, Barbera, Freisa and other peasant grapes are now being made with the same TLC as Nebbiolo and the results are fantastic wines of character that most people have never heard of. So go ahead and drink like a peasant, but let's keep it our little secret for now.

Lombardia

Continuing east from the Alto Piemonte along the base of the Alps we cross over into the region of Lombardia. Although Milan is the capital, we are going to skip the industrial city in search of something rustic and closer to nature. Instead we head towards the beautiful Lake Como and then trek even deeper into the foothills of the Alps until we reach the Adda River Valley, home to the Valtellina wine region. Valtellina is known for very high altitude and very steep vineyards where the farmers toil on the grueling slopes for very low yields of delicate and floral Nebbiolo. Valtellina provides the perfect complement to the powerful Nebbiolo of Barolo/Barbaresco.

Veneto

The Adige River is not exactly navigable, so we'll have to drive alongside as we leave Bolzano and head south to Verona, in the region of the Veneto. We are now in the former kingdom of Venice and the capital city is still the center of gravity for all of northeastern Italy. The distinctive red wines of Veneto are blends based predominately on the Corvina grape and many are made from grapes dried for months in ventilated lofts called fruttai. Veneto reds are rich and sensuous wines that closely mimic the feel of jumping naked into a pool of liquid velvet, and we all know exactly what that's like.

Tuscany

Central Italy is beckoning and we must heed the call. From Verona, we'll head south towards the rolling hills of Tuscany. Obviously, we'll stop in Bologna along the way for a hearty meal and a pile of Prosciutto di Parma, washed down with bottles of Lambrusco, as one does. Tuscany is where the continental climate gives way to Mediterranean and olive trees begin to heavily populate the landscape. Sangiovese is the most widely planted grape in Italy, but it's only in Tuscany where it achieves superstar status. Tuscany is a great place to get out of your comfort zone. Try a Chianti if you are a Burgundy drinker or a Brunello if you normally swig on Bordeaux or a Supertuscan if your thing is a big Napa Cab.

Historically, the cities of Florence and Sienna have skirmished over one of the most recognizable regions in wine: Chianti. That seems like a pretty good reason to open a bottle to see what all the fighting was about. This historical area is now known as Chianti Classico and is where most, but not all, of the best examples are made. Forget those 1980s straw covered flasks, these Chiantis are the real deal.

Brunello di Montalcino is believed by many to be the highest expression of the Sangiovese grape. The wine was created pretty much single handedly by the producer Biondi-Santi in the 1880s. Big, bold and spicy Sangiovese from the hills of Montalcino.

If Montalcino and Chianti Classico are the Groucho and Chico of Sangiovese, then certainly Montepulciano makes a compelling case as Harpo. As the silent brother, you don't hear much about Vino Nobile di Montalcino, but there great wines being made here from Sangiovese and many producers are working to revive the historical reputation of this "noble wine".

Tuscany

What is a Super Tuscan? That's a great question and we wish we could give you a straight answer. Bordeaux blend? Sure. Sangiovese? Maybe. Single varietal? Could be. As Stewart Potter famously said: "I know it when I see it", and we tend to agree. Sometimes Super Tuscans are wines that break the rules and can't be labeled as Chianti Classico. Sometimes Super Tuscans are like your Gen X dad who thinks he is breaking the rules, but doesn't realize that the rules changed long ago. This category is very diverse, but all of the wines show a certain Tuscan style, regardless of grape variety or vineyard location.

We still have half a boot to experience, so we must pull ourselves away from the beautiful Tuscan villas and head south to the hotter, drier and more sparsely populated southern regions of Italy. This area is not widely known for high quality wines, but some producers are knocking it out of the park with indigenous varieties that have adapted very remarkably to the climate. These are truly wines for the adventurer.

We’ve barely scratched the surface of what the peninsula has to offer in terms of wine, but, alas, time waits for no wine soaked explorer and it’s time to jump on over the Strait of Messina and to the island of Sicily. The high altitude vineyards on the side of the slopes of Mount Etna, an active volcano, offer some of the most distinctive wines of the island and the Nero d’Avola and Frappato grapes are the source of head turning wines in the cellars of Vittoria in the southwest of the island.

Barcelona may be our port of call, but we can't stay long, for we have a date with the utterly timeless wines of Rioja. First let's make a quick detour to the mountainous region of Priorat, Spain's answer to the Grenache based wines of Chateauneuf du Pape. The black slate and mica soils of Priorat give the wines otherworldly concentration, almost painfully so, but more Swedish massage than 50 Shades of Grey.

La Rioja

We meet up with the Ebro river at the edge of Catalonia and follow it inland until we reach Haro, the de facto capital of Rioja wine production. Rioja wine as we know it was essentially created by Bordeaux merchants at the end of the 1800s to compensate for the massive loss of vines in France due to a vicious little rascal endearingly known as Phylloxera vastatrix ("the devastator"). Made from a blend of Tempranillo, Garnacha (Grenache), Graciano and Mazuelo (Carignan) and traditionally aged in large American oak vats, Rioja has the ability to age and improve for decades.

López de Heredia

In Rioja there is López de Heredia and then there is everyone else. This ultra-traditional estate has hardly changed a thing in 150 years and today serves as an example of multigenerational excellence for family owned wineries around the world. Maria José López de Heredia is the fourth generation to run the estate and she energetically crafts the wines from the family's four vineyards with the same philosophy as her great-grandfather. LdH's Riojas are released after years of age in barrel and bottle and deliver a kaleidoscopic range of scents and flavors that will leave you in disbelief that a glass of wine could be capable of such complexity.

Castilla y León

As we venture west from La Rioja and over the Sierra de la Demanda, we find ourselves in the region Castilla y León. As one of the largest regions of Spain, it is home to many famous producers that are located in some of the more popular denominaciones de origen (DO's) like Toro and Rivera del Duero where Tempranillo reigns supreme. Aside from the rich history of wine making, this region is also known for its UNESCO World Heritage sites, museums, and castles. We don't recommend traveling here in the summers unless you enjoy the hot, dry, and dusty weather. However, we have brought the wines here so you may enjoy them year round.

Chateau Musar

Musar might be the greatest wine that you've never heard of. Everything about this producer and its wines is sui generis. For starters, it's located in Lebanon, a place not normally thought of for fine wine production. Secondly, there has never been a wine personality more inspiring or consequential than Serge Hochar. In the 60s Serge took over the estate that his father founded and brought it to global prominence through sheer force of will. Through trials and tribulations and even the devastating Lebanese Civil War, Serge remained devoted to making his unique blend of Cabernet, Cinsault and Carignan until his death in 2014. Each vintage tells a different story of Chateau Musar, and that diversity is what puts the wines, both red and white, in a class all their own.

California

Throw on a Springsteen record and get ready to party because we are back in the U.S.A. After everything we've been through together we think that we've earned your trust, so we're going to be honest with you about something. California wines used to be awesome back in the day, then they got kind of monotonous and boring for a while, and now they are back to being the bee's knees. New and exciting grapes, regions and styles abound and the old classics are still at the top of their game. It's an exciting time to drink Cali wine, from Diego to the Bay, as the good Dr. might put it.

Bedrock Wine Co.

Morgan Twain-Peterson was born into Zinfandel royalty. His father, Joel, founded Ravenswood Winery in the 1970s and was a pioneer in making high quality and age worthy Zinfandels from some of the oldest vineyards in the U.S. Morgan was steeped in winemaking from old vines from an early age and now produces wines from many of the ancient vineyards still remaining in California. Morgan and his partner, Chris Cottrell, have become protectors of these old vineyards, sometimes saving them from destruction due to their painfully low yields. The results are oh so good: deeply complex and fascinating wines produced from 100+ year old vines of mixed varieties that will tell you their story from the pop of the cork to the last drop in the glass.

Some of you have been riding along on this half-cocked wine adventure patiently waiting for the sun kissed and well structured goodness that is Napa Valley Cabernet Sauvignon. Well friends, your perseverance has been rewarded, because we have arrived at the pinnacle of pure Cabernet enjoyment tucked in between the Mayacamas and Vaca mountain ranges. Mountain Cabernet shows the more tannic side of the grape and grapes grown on the valley floor show a much softer persona. Don't limit yourself to Napa, however. Other areas of California are producing Cabernets that might entice you to stray from your first Cabernet love every now and then.
